Introduction

System

Library E-Book Lending & Reservation System

Purpose

This document is intended to define the functional requirements of the Library E-Book Lending & Reservation System, a console-based Java application. The system provides user reservation and reading of e-books in a virtual library with an administration facility for managing users, books, and reservations. Each feature of the system is explained in detail here as an implementation, testing, and future development reference guide.

Scope

This system imitates an e-book lending website in electronic form to be utilized for educational or public use. It supports:

- User registration, authentication, and role-based access control
- Display and management of digital books and user accounts
- Reservation and reading of digital books
- Automatic and manual reservation status update
- Administrative control over library catalog and user management

The software runs on the console and uses text files for simulating permanent storage (users.txt, books.txt, reservations.txt, etc.). The software is to use advanced object-oriented programming concepts like inheritance, polymorphism, interfaces, file operations, and exception handling.

This document has:

- Functional Requirements
- Input/Output specifications
- Preconditions and user actions
- Status transition logic

No GUI design, networked functionality, or integration with external systems such as email or real-time notifications.

Target Audience

This document is for:

- Team members implementing system design and programming
- Professors marking the design and correctness of the assignment

Assumptions

- The system will be implemented in a controlled environment.
- All users interact with the system through the command-line interface.
- Storage using files is utilized instead of a full database.
- Dates are placed in a standard and valid format (e.g., YYYY-MM-DD).
- Each e-book is delivered as a .txt file in a specified books/ directory.
- Only a single user can access the system at any given time.
- System time is depended upon and used to automatically update reservation status.
